NEWS FROM THE COUNTRY

DESERONTO.

The schr. Lorretta has been laid up here for the winter.

The yard department of the Rathbun Company is very busy at present shipping lumber to various points in the province for building purposes. The demand is at present more brisk than it has been all season.

Melbourn Masten has moved his family to Napanee Mills, where he is employed as millwright in the cement works.

Vast quantities of apples are being brought from all points on the bay to be transhipped from Deseronto on the Bay of Quinte railway for Montreal and other ports.

The clerks of the Bank of England are holding angry meetings to protest against the recent admission into the service of two batches of lady clerks.

Mr. H. B. Rathbun and family arrived safely at Riverside, California.

For healthy lungs: Milburn's Cod Liver Oil Emulsion with Wild Cherry and Eucalyptus combines the curative powers of the pectoral remedies mentioned in the most perfect and palatable form. Price 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

YARKER.

At the November meeting of Official Quarterly Board, of Yarker circuit, held at Yarker, on 5th inst, the following resolution was unanimously adopted.

Moved by James Bell, sec. by S. S. Guess and resolved.

1st.—That whereas it has pleased Almighty God to remove from labor and suffering to rest and reward our dear brother, Wm. N. Wagar, of Colebrook, a faithful steward of the Methodist church, and a valued member of this board, we take this opportunity to record our high appreciation of his exemplary christian character, his fidelity to every trust committed to him, and his self sacrificing zeal in the service of the church of which for many years he was a consistent member.

2nd.—That a copy of this resolution be sent to Mrs. Wagar and the family with the assurance of our deep sympathy with them in their irreparable loss and of our earnest and united prayers in their behalf.

Beyond dispute: There is no better, safer or more pleasant cough remedy made than Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. It cures Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles.

WILTON.

The entire community was deeply grieved when it was announced on Sunday morning that Mrs. N. A. Asselstine had passed away during the night. Mrs. Asselstine had been ill only a few days and her death seems to be an especially sad one, as she leaves eight children, the youngest one being only a few days old. The funeral was held in the Methodist Church, Wednesday morning, at 10:30 o'clock, Rev. D. Flemming, of Harrowsmith, conducted the services. Deceased was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. The bereaved husband and children have the sincere sympathy of all.

The Sunday School social, which was to have been held Thanksgiving night has been postponed indefinitely, owing to the death of Mrs. Asselstine, the superintendent's wife.

Rev. Mr. Dunkley, of Morven, preached in the Methodist church Sunday morning. Mr. J. Wallace lost a valuable horse on Monday from inflammation.

Those who attended the Wells-Ray concert at Harrowsmith last week were highly pleased with the entertainments.

A Boon to Horsemen.—One bottle of English Spavin Liniment completely removed a curb from my horse. I take pleasure in recommending the remedy, as it acts with mysterious promptness in the removal from horses of hard, soft or calloused humps, blood spavin, splints, curbs, swellings, stifles and sprains. BATH.

The signs indicate approaching winter.

Longfellow says:—

"O fortunate, O happy day,

When a new household finds its place

Among the myriad homes of earth."

If that is the case there has been many fortunate and happy days this fall, and still there's more to follow.

A series of revival meetings have been held at Wood's school house, High Shore, and at the Methodist church, Doxsee's corners. Many converts at both places.

Catarrrhal Deafness.—Deafness or dull hearing follows catarrh, colds, etc. Hagyard's Yellow Oil cures even the worst cases in a few applications.

ADOLPHUSTOWN.

The farmers of this district are through ploughing, and they are now getting things ready for the cold weather.

Miss Mallory has returned home from Watertown, where she has spent the last few months with her sister, Mrs. Roblin.

Miss Maud Cadman and her sister left for Kingston where they will spend a few weeks visiting friends.

Mr. Will Galagher has come home from the States where he has spent the summer. He paid the corners a flying visit on Sunday evening and did things up in good shape, don't you think so Hattie.

The young folks of Adolphustown are enjoying themselves at the assemblies which are held every two weeks. Be sure and bring your best girl, boys.

Have you noticed the goods in Chinneck's window lately. He seems to be offering such a nice assortment of new goods. Fancy pins, souvenir spoons, the latest in China goods of the finer kinds. It will pay you to look over his stock before purchasing.

ERINSVILLE.

A large and very pleasant wedding took place in Erinsville Monday 12th inst, the contracting parties being Mr. Patrick Hunt and Miss Annie Murphy. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Cicolari. The bride looked handsome attired in a beautiful suit of cinnamon brown beaver cloth trimmed with fur. The bride was waited upon by Miss Annie Hunt sister of the groom, and the groom by Mr. Thos. Murphy Brother of the bride. After the ceremony was performed the wedding party proceeded to the Phalen house where many pleasant hours were spent dancing and waltzing until three o'clock when they drove to the home of the bride's mother where dinner awaited. The tables were handsomely decorated with many delicacies of the season to which every one done justice after which dancing was kept up until morning, the happy couple were the recipient of many valuable and useful presents the list of which is as follows:—Thomas Murphy a handsome black pony and a valuable table cloth; Annie Hunt a handsome water set and server; Mrs. Murphy mother of the bride a costly bound prayer book; Annie Hooly a parlor lamp; Mrs. Kennedy, a lamp; Mrs. Sara Murphy a lamp; Mr. and Miss Mellen, a water set; Annie Murphy, a glass picture; Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill, Kingston, a handsome clock, set glass dishes; Minnie Murphy sister of bride, a china dinner set and berrie set; Rosie Doyle, handsome vases; Katie Hunt a tea-pot, china cup and saucer; Maggie A. Hunt, glass biscuit dish; Mrs. Phalen, set of glass dishes; Mr. and Mrs. Orley, a vegetable dish; Maggie Murphy, a table cloth; Mrs. J. Hunt, dozen side dishes; Darry Keegan, covered dish; Mrs. Gee, covered dish; Miss Mooney, a breakfast cruet; Sarah Broughen, a bread server; Annie Hunt, a pair towels; Mr. J. Murphy a mirror; Mrs. Gasgoyne, a salt cup; Arthur Murphy, cups and saucers; Maggie A. O'Neill, china pitcher; Mr. and Mrs. J. Hunt, china cups and saucers; Tommy Doyhe, shaving mug and brush; Pat Murphy, mustard cup; J. Walters, a handsome mug; Ellie Dishave molasses pitcher and cheese server; Mrs. C. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

To the editor of the EXPRESS.

Dear Sir,—I wish to call your attention to a ploughing match I had with William Chapman, of Bath, on the 31st of Oct., for a bet of $20 a side. At the time the agreement was made there was no mention made about wheel plows. When I met him on the morning of the match and saw the plow that he had I did not like to compete. It was a $50 plow imported from Scotland, while mine was a common No. 3 Wilkison plow, and I thought it was not fair to plow against one like that so I offered Chapman a $10 bill if he would take the wheels off his plow, but he would not do so. I then offered him the same amount if he took a plow like mine or any other plow manufactured in Canada. Now, Sir, this was all said in the presence of the two Judges, Mr. Allen Neilson, of Sandhurst, and Mr. Preston, of Bath, who can vouch for the truth these statements. Mr. Chapman told me that if I did not plow him he would take the money so what was I to do but get out of it as best I could. We plowed two lands each, and when the two Judges could not agree they called in a third party. When the Judges looked over the plowing they said my first land was the best plowed land they ever saw and the best finished. The second land must have been the worst they ever saw, or else Chapman could not have got the money. The three Judges said if it was only my first land they would give me the money. Now it does seem strange that I should plow such a good one and such a bad one. The Judges were a long time before they could agree and as the third party called in was a friend of Chapman's of course the decision was given in his favor. Almost every spectator on the field said that my plowing was the best and that I should have got the money. It was the talk around Bath the next day that Chapman was to have the money because he was poor and I could well afford to lose mine. Now there is one thing more, I should like to say, that went against me and that is that I am a man 76 years of age and the oldest that ever plowed at a match.

stains, stains and stains. The Rev. Tucker, on Sabbath evening delivered a very eloquent sermon to the Bath Lodge, of Chosen Friends, choosing the text from Matt. 7—12, taking Christ as a true pattern of Brotherhood, and applying the Golden Text in a very applicable and edifying manner. The members of the Lodge presented a fine appearance, walking to the church in a body occupying the centre seats, and showing their Brotherhood, and appreciation of the sermon by donating a very handsome collection.

Harper's Magazine.

The Simplotons, a new novel by THOMAS HARDY, will be begun in the December Number, 1894, and continued to November, 1895. Whoever may be one's favorite among English novelists, it will be well to heed by all critics that THOMAS HARDY stands foremost as a master artist in fiction, and the Simplotons may be expected to arouse enthusiasm not inferior in degree to that which has marked Tilly—the most successful story of the Maids of Orleans. In the January Number will be a profusely illustrated paper on Charleston and the Carolinas, the first of a series of Southern Papers.

Northern Africa is attracting more attention than at any other time since it was the seat of empire. The next volume of HARPER'S MAGAZINE will contain four illustrated articles on this region, and three of them will depict the present life there. JULIAN RALPH will prepare for the MAGAZINE a series of eight stories depicting typical Chinese life and manners. Besides the long stories there will begin in January Number the first chapters of A Three-Part Novelle, by RICHARD HARDING DAVIS—the longest work yet attempted by this writer. The story of the Maids of Orleans, by popular writers will continue to be a feature of the MAGAZINE.

Send for Illustrated Prospectus.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE begin with the Number for June and December of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscription will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order. Cloth cases, for binding, 50 cents each—by mail postpaid. Title-page and Index on application.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss. Newspapers are not to copy this advertisement without the express order of Harper and Brothers.

tional progress, yet they have there value in determining to some extent the degree to which prescribed lines of thought have been mastered. Serious injustice is done to many of the following students of the Napanee Collegiate Institute if we judge of their ability and application by the average percentages given opposite their names, and taken by them in the exams, held at the beginning of the present month. Other considerations, such as the degree to which sickness has interfered, the length of time the pupil has been in the form, home opportunities for study, the course of study chosen, etc., should have weight in making any such comparison. Our object in publishing the list is to give parents some means of comparing the standing of their boys and girls in the school, with the evidences they have of their work at home.

A terrible experience.—Mr. Geo. Tripe of Stratfordville, Ont., a pretty village near the shores of Lake Erie, went through an experience lately that he will never forget. He tells it in his own words:

For three years I suffered from skin disease in its worst form. I tried Kennedy Medical Discovery and the Cuticura remedies, and doctored one year with the best physicians in the land but got no benefit; they pronounced my disease a scaly eruption, but failed to remove it. It came on in red blotches and spread over my body; the skin became dry and formed hard, white scales; the itching was intolerable, but I am now completely cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. I can truly say that I owe my good health to B. B. B. and I advise all sufferers to use the splendid medicine.

RUSSIAN HOUSEKEEPING

An Echanting and Luxurious Exterior is Often a White Sepulchre, Hiding Domestic Dry Bones and Miseries.
An American—the circumstances of whose life compel her to live in Russia—writes: "The housekeeping here is very expressive of the real character of the people. When I first came all my preconceived ideas seemed to be quite upset.
"The first dinner we went to was the most beautiful thing I ever saw. Such flowers, such gold and silver plate, such exquisite porcelains and such beautiful service! The table was a great square of oak, black as ink, and as polished as marble. Very wisely they had not hid its beauty under a cloth. Its only covering was two strips of splendid old altar lace laid along each edge under the plates. Up the middle of the table marched 12 candlesticks, two and two, and these were of that lovely Venetian glass which has the milky green of shallow sea water, thickly powdered with gold dust. They were made in those fantastic dragon-shapes of which the Venice glass-workers are so fond, and the shades were of delicate gold flamage, hardly heavier than cobwebs, set over pale violet silk. There were 20 or 30 tiny gold vases set about the table everywhere, filled with white and purple double violets—just careless little clusters, with long loose stems and a few leaves. At each plate stood a small forest of wine glasses, each one a gem of the Venetian factories, making a charming mass of translucent color, milky, green, amethyst and gold. All the forks and spoons and knives were works of art, with handles of gold, of carved ivory, of porcelain or of the beautiful Russian enamels and clove work.
"Everything one touched or handled or used in any way was a delight to the eye, and the many men who served us simply moved like shadows.
"The women were the most beautiful, high-bred creatures I ever saw—such grace, such charm, such ease, and the fluency with which they slipped from one tongue to another without apparently knowing any difference—to facility—in English, German, French or Russian—fairly took away one's breath. And then such gowns and jewels! I have never seen women so well dressed anywhere outside of America. The men weren't quite so nice. They had heavy faces, and brushed their hair straight up like a scrubbing brush, in that odious Continental fashion, but they were quite as brilliant and accomplished as the women, and the effect of the whole was of the last perfection of civilization, luxury and high breeding.
"We came away enchanted and saying, 'Isn't it just like a pert little provincial mind to judge a whole nation without knowing anything about them?'
"At first, it was all like that—everything was so picturesque, so graceful and luxurious, that we congratulated ourselves on being obliged to live in Russia. We saw only the pleasant side—the outside of life. Finally we grew very tired of living in a hotel and concluded we would seek a furnished house for the season. There was one which had taken my fancy greatly. It was occupied by people we knew and was particularly picturesque. The owners were rich people, and they had furnished it in a semi-Oriental fancy, which pleased me tremendously. Since Russian influence has become paramount in Persia the best of the Persian looms confine themselves to supply the Russian market, and the walls of this house were hung throughout with the most beautiful rugs I had ever seen. It made the most charming picture when one went in out of the bitter cold to have a cup of afternoon tea there, and was ushered into this great drawing-room hung with these gorgeous mosaics of color, wide low divans all around the room, more splendid rugs under foot, the samovar steaming on a pearl inlaid table, low lights making a soft, rich gloom, and a faint smell of incense mingled with the perfume of the heaps of hothouse flowers. So that when I heard these acquaintances were going to Paris and wanted to let their house as it stood I said at once I would take it, without taking the precaution of examining it.
"The day after they left I went over from the hotel to have a look about and see if there were any little rearrangements I wanted made before moving in, and to order a thorough house-cleaning

NAPANEE, ONT

Tory organs who thought the outcome of the election in London was in doubt, will now have their doubts removed.

Now that he is dead it has been ascertained that that much maligned man, the Czar of Russia, wasn't half a bad fellow.

800 of a majority for the Reform candidate in the Tory city of London—truly this is getting to be a delightful country to live in.

Tory organs, who have a good "pull" with the Government, are just now lauding the beauties of Hon. Mackenzie Bowell's drawback policy.

With a Marter in their old leader's boots and a Reformer in possession of his seat the members of Her Majesty's Local Opposition did not have much relish for Thanksgiving.

Why should the Canadian manufacturer be assisted by the Government to sell his agricultural implements at a lower rate to the Australian farmer than he charges the Canadian farmer for the same article?

When one stops to consider that Australia produces a superfluity of the very articles that we export it gives one that "tired feeling" to hear Tory organs blating about "encouraging our direct growing trade with Australia."

Our sympathy goes out to Queen's University in her bereavement. It's not her recent defeat by Ottawa, although that was bad enough, that troubles her most, but it's the sad, sad thought that she will not be in it next year, as Fox and several others of her best football players leave college this year.

With an increase of only twenty per cent in our population during the past 16 years what has justified the increase of taxation from $17,841,938 in 1877-78 to $29,321,367 in 1892-93 as shown by the last public accounts. Then look at the increase in our national debt from $174,957,268 in 1878 to $310,211,200 in 1893, with $12,500,000 more to be added as the result of Foster's recent visit to London.

While the Patrons are on the question of Law Reform it wouldn't be a bad idea for them to insert a clause providing for the more economical feeding of Juries. With three meals a day, at 40 cents per meal, it cost $73 to feed the Jury in the Hartley murder trial at Brantford. This is at the rate of about $8.50 a week, per man, and the most of us can grub along fairly well for a month on that.

THE NAPANEE EXPRESS says:—"The City Council of Toronto is pretty badly mixed up in a boodling scandal, and now The Globe is of the opinion that the police force will bear some investigation also." This may convey a wrong impression. The Globe has made complaint about the number of burglaries, but certainly has not impeached the honesty of the force.—The Globe.

"To him that hath will be given, and from him that hath not will be taken away," is the motto of the Tory Government. That much favored pet, the Canadian manufacturer, is to be allowed a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty paid on all articles entering into the construction of manufactured goods intended for export. If one class is to be favored why not equalise the matter by extending the privilege to the farmers, who are forced to pay a heavy duty to those same manufacturers on "articles entering into the construction of materials" that they are forced to export.

This matter of giving the manufacturer a remission of the duty he pays upon the raw material entering into the manufacture of articles intended for export is clearly a case of discrimination against the home consumer endorsed by the Government. Why not abolish the duty on raw material entering into our manufactures, whether for export or home consumption, as advocated by Sir Richard Cartwright in the House last session? With foreign competition kept out by a high protective tariff the manufacturer is able to charge the Canadian consumer what he likes and the large margin he gets on goods he sells them enables him to cut his prices fine when entering the foreign market with the government's rebate of duty on the raw material entering into what he exports. Is this a square deal?

The Seven Bibles of the World.

The seven Bibles of the world are the Koran of the Mohammedans, the Tri Pitakes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the three Vedas of the Hindus, the Zendavesta of the Persians, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, and the Scriptures of the Christians.

The Koran is the most recent of all, dating from about the seventh century after Christ. It is a compound of quotations from both the Old and the New Testaments, and from the Talmud.

The Tri Pitakes contain sublime morals and pure aspirations. Their author lived and died in the century before Christ.

The sacred writings of the Chinese are called the Five Kings, the word 'kings' meaning a web of cloth. From this it is presumed they were originally written on five rolls of cloth. They contain wise sayings from the sages on the duties of life, but they cannot be traced further back than the eleventh century before our era.

The Zendavesta of the Persians, next to our Bible, is reckoned among scholars as being the greatest and most learned of the sacred writings. Zoroaster, whose sayings it contains, lived and worked in the twelfth century before Christ.

Moses lived and wrote the Pentateuch fifteen hundred years before the birth of Christ; therefore that portion of our Bible is at least three hundred years older than the most ancient of other sacred writings.

The Eddas, a semi-sacred work of the Scandinavians, was given to the world in the fourteenth century.—Missionary Review of the World.

chambers. "But where did the family sleep? I asked of the woman left in charge. 'Oh, no place in particular,' she replied, quite as if that were a matter of course; 'wherever they happened to be when they were sleepy.' Sometimes in the drawing room, sometimes here; there are divans everywhere, you see."

"But didn't they take off their clothes?" I gasped in horror.

"Generally; but one doesn't need a bed chamber for that. One just rings for a servant to bring some negligee or nightdress, and the same servant takes away the clothes one drops off and fetches a duvet to spread over one."

"That was enough. The drawing-room had lost all its charms for me. Inquiry developed that when one woke up in these haphazard beds in the morning one called a servant, who came with a breakfast tray, and one ate where one had slept. Investigation showed that in the midst of all this luxury and beauty the commonest necessities and conveniences were wanting. With a sinking heart I made out a list as long as my arm of what it would be necessary to purchase to make the house a possible abode for an American. Then I took up the subject of house cleaning and suggested that all the rugs had better come down from the walls and be thoroughly cleaned and shaken before being hung again. The servant was very dubious. They had not been down for years.

"All the more need for it, then," said I, and lifted one corner, only to drop it again with a cry of disgust. Behind those glowing colors and rich designs were peacefully dwelling untold thousands of beetles, roaches and creeping things not to be named. I gave one swift glance under the divans, and, picking up my skirts, fled for my life. Apparently for years when the rooms had been swept everything had simply been pushed under the convenient hiding place of the divans, and my hasty inspection showed an indescribable collection of dust, hair, mouldy crusts, dirty gloves, combs, broken glass, pins, handkerchiefs—any and everything that would ordinarily be found in an American ash-can.

"I finally realized that the whole incident was very characteristic of Russian civilization. They are a people who say, 'Give us the luxuries of life, and we won't ask for the necessities.'"

THE DAY OF GIVING.

N the amber days of autumn, when the mallows blush and glow, And the ambient "up-per ocean" holds a crystal hint of snow, Comes an hour of tender feeling, when charity holds sway, And the world is gently thoughtful of the Nation's Giving Day

Then the jocund-visaged pumpkin gives its wealth of toothsome gold, Sandwiched 'twixt the snowy crustings into flaky lightness rolled. And the oligarchic gobbler, child of pomp and indolence, Gives his plump and luscious being to the spirit of recompense.

The man of many millions gives a trifle from his store, The toiler strips his larder of a good full half or more, While 'neath the grinning rafters where starving thousands lie, The dying give a blessing and the living give a sigh.

O! Father of the helpless, hasten Thou the blessed morn That the faithful long have waited, promised since the Christ was born, When there shall be in all the land no barred nor bolted door, Nor marbled super-selfishness, nor hungry, howled poor.

TRUE BLUE.

O! Get out of my sight! You pollute the very atmosphere with a taint of your rascality. Go! Go before I forget myself and strike you! You are the only member of the Peppergrass family that has disgraced it by criminal actions, and I am thankful you do not bear its name. You are a living lie to the name you do wear. True Blue—a fine-pointed sarcasm on a ripe scoundrel! Here, take this money, that you may not start penniless, and go. You are branded as a thief and I never wish to see your face again." Thus spoke my uncle, Judge Obadiah Peppergrass, to me on Thanksgiving eve two years ago.

"He's not a thief and you can not prove your accusation!" exclaimed my warm-hearted cousin Cherry, enthusiastically, in my defence. "I'll never believe it."
"Wasn't he suspended from college because stolen examination papers were found in his desk? And doesn't that, coupled with the fact that he was the only student in his class who received one hundred per cent., in his studies, prove him guilty?" irascibly questioned my fiery-tempered uncle.

"And where can your bonds have disappeared to?" insinuated Willie Steele, my college chum, who had accompanied me home to my uncle's to spend Thanksgiving week.

I started and glanced at Steele; but his eye quailed before mine and fixed itself upon the money on the floor, where my uncle had thrown it to me as he would have a bone to a dog. I hesitated a moment, bit my lip and said nothing, though my eyes snapped the scorn I entertained for the insinuation from my most trusted companion. Then I thanked Aunt Roxy and my cousin Cherry for their faith in my integrity and stepped outside the door to face the

Then I wandered listlessly with aching head and swollen eyes till I heard the bell of the village church and its peacans woke me to full life and a full sense of mental and physical pain. All unconsciously I trod the well-worn path that led toward my uncle's house, the only home I had ever known. I walked erect with all the dignity of despair, combatting a fierce longing to see the fair face of my dimpled champion, my sweet cousin Cherry, once more.

While I was thus musing and doubting I had been nearing an arbor close by the house. This I entered, then sat down to think. For a time my mind wandered from my woes and I became absorbed in the engraving of my fair cousin's initials on the arbor seat with my pen-knife. I even added a heart pierced with an arrow, and so wrapt did I become in my empty-headed occupation that I failed to hear the approach of footsteps until a voice behind me whispered:

"Better run that arrow through another heart and cut your own initials under mine."

"Cherry!" I exclaimed, as I looked up. "I had an offer of marriage last night, coz," said Cherry with a gurgling laugh, when we had seated ourselves on a convenient log.

"An offer of marriage!" I repeated in surprise, remembering her warm, loving salute and affectionate embraces of a few minutes previous.

"Yes, from your college friend, Willie Steele."

"And did you say 'yes'?"

"No, I didn't, you goosey; you know I'll never, never, never say 'yes' to any man until you ask me, and there's no need of your saying anything. Now, think I'm an immodest country hoyden if you like. But read this for the present. I found it on the floor of your sneaky friend's room. When you have read it you won't have to ask if I refused to marry him."

I took the envelope and glanced at the superscription.

"Why, this is addressed to Steele, Cherry."

"Never mind if it is; just you read it. I wouldn't have looked at it only for the clause in it about you. The letter was out of the envelope and I saw your name when I was putting it back to slip under his door."

"Please read it for me, Cherry; I'm dizzy and all in a shaver."

I kept my teeth from chattering and listened to her reading until a sentence warmed me beyond reach of the most frigid chills.

A SCALY ERUPTION
UNENDURABLE ITCHING
Suffered Three Years—Now Perfectly Cured by B.B.B.

CENTLEMAN—I have used Burdock Blood Bitters for Skin Diseases, from which I have been a sufferer for three years. I have used six bottles and am now entirely cured. I tried other remedies, such as Donald Kennedy's Medical Discovery and the Cuticura Remedies, but all to no good. I depended one year with the best physicians in the land; they pronounced my disease a Scaly Eruption. But I could not remove it. It came on in red blotches and spread over my body; the skin became dry and formed hard dry scales. The itching was intolerable, but I completely got rid of it all.

DEAR SIRS—After having used Burdock Blood Bitters for Scrofula in the blood, I feel it my duty to make known the results. I was treated by a skilled physician but he failed to cure me. I tried B.B.B., which healed my neck which could not be healed until I tried B.B.B., which healed them completely, leaving the skin and flesh as the whole. As I shall and whole. I shall to me, the most notable Thanksgiving eve. Slowly, sweetly through the clear, frosty air, over the heads of the gaunt elms that fringed the village churchyard, came the sounds of voices rehearsing hymns for the morrow's Thanksgiving service. What would the morrow bring to me?

My future was shattered; I had nothing to live for, nothing to hope for while stigmatized as a felon, and so I lay down with my face to the ground and prayed for death—but death came not. It sent its brother, sleep.

It was morning when I awoke—Thanksgiving morning. I had slept through the long cold night by the roadside. The day was an open day, bright, clear and cheerful—even beautiful. I felt that I could not die.

If you don't hand over the money I'll squire and tell the squire and yore folk all I know.

"JED MICKLIN."

"O! Cherry!" I ejaculated, "you are my guardian angel. And to think that I lay all last night by the roadside praying I might die."

"Well, never mind about dying now, you silly boy."

"Do you imagine I have been foolish enough to keep this letter from pa until I could see you again? You left as cool as a cucumber, just as though your country cousin Cherry didn't have any interest in your return. It would have served you right if I hadn't shown this to pa; but I did and if we look over the bend as we go home you may see something that will surprise you."

Cherry's prophecy was a true one for as we, hand in hand, peered through the barberry bushes to the bend in the road below, the village constable stepped from a convenient hiding-place and placed his hand on Jed Micklin's shoulder.

"READ IT FOR ME, CHERRY."

"Glad to see ye back, Jed; I've been er waitin' uv yeon," he said.

Steele started to escape up the pathway leading to the house, and ran straight into my Uncle Diah's arms.

"Diah," dryly remarked Aunt Roxy, "them bonds ez yeon wuz er figgetin' erbout is in one o' yeour boot-legs, jist wher yeon put 'em yeoursel' when yeon started for ther village an' didn't gao euz et wuz rainin' an' yeon wuz skeert or ther rumatiz. Yeon axed me ter grease 'em, ther butes, I mean, an' I faound ther papers inside on 'em."

As we sat down together on that eventful Thanksgiving day, I drank in every word of the prayer offered by my uncle, and I felt in my heart I had much more than the dinner to be thankful for.

I returned to college and graduated the next year, and the following Thanksgiving, when we gathered around the sacrificial turkey, Uncle Diah and Aunt Roxy were the guests of Cherry, who presided over the repast as the newly-made wife of True Blue.

MINNA'S THANKSGIVING.

A little maiden, once there was Who heard her mother say Upon a bright November morn: "This is Thanksgiving Day."

In little Minna's grateful heart There dawned a purpose new: "Then if this is Thanksgiving Day I know what I will do."

She wrapped her in a cloak so warm And tied her little hood, And to the barn did Minna run As quickly as she could.

"And straight she went to where the cows Stood each within its stall; And said, and stroked their sides the while: 'I've come to thank you all.'

"I know you give us every day The fresh sweet milk we drink; And cream and butter, too, and cheese; You're very good, I think."

Then Minna crossed the barn, to speak To Dick, the good old horse: "O, Dick! when I am giving thanks I'll thank you, too, of course."

"No matter what the time of year, You work and work all day; In Spring you drag the heavy plough, In Summer loads of hay."

Speak to B. B. D. and I will tell you how to get a medicine is provided for sufferers. MRS. W. BENNETT. Acton P. O. Ont.

PURIFIES THE BLOOD

"You take the bags of grain to mill, You bring the flour back; And from the forest cut the wood, However rough the track.

"For all these things, you dear old Dick, I've come my thanks to pay; I thought of it when mother said 'This is Thanksgiving day.'"

Then down the dim and dusty barn Did Minna trip along To where the sheep were huddled close, A gentle, woolly throng.

She patted them with loving hand, The sheep stood unafraid; "Thank you for all my nice warm clothes," Then said the little maid.

With smiling face, and having still Her grateful thoughts in mind, Next to the farmyard Minna went Her feathered friends to find.

With cluck and cackle, all the hens Soon gathered at her feet; Said Minna: "Thank you for the eggs You've given me to eat."

Then little Minna ran again Across the sparkling snow, And soon was at her mother's side With face and heart aglow.

"I've been and thanked them, mother dear, As nicely as I could;—The cows, the sheep, the hens and Dick—I think they understood."

"For they all listened quietly To everything I said, And Dick! I wished you could have seen The way he bowed his head."

"They might have thought it very strange If I had stayed away And had not given thanks to them Upon Thanksgiving Day!"

CHAPTER XI. AN ANGEL!

The evening wore on, and at an appointed hour, Rosabel's attendants came to assist her in undressing; but she did not wish their presence. She wished to be alone. She said she would call them when she wanted them.

And what direction were the thoughts of the princess taking, as she sat there alone, with her hands clasped upon her bosom, and her eyes fixed upon the floor? Listen. She speaks her thoughts aloud:

"O, it came like a bright vision across my path, and was quickly swallowed up in darkness. If it be a sin to love one below me in station, then I am a sinner, and I can not repent. Oh, sweet youth, why has fate been so cruel? Noble, brave, and generous—thou art worthy the love of a queen. Orlando, Orlando, where art thou? O, were it not for these cruel locks that are placed upon my passage, I would seek thee, even though death stood in the way! But, alas! I am doomed. Ah, thou wilt never know how Rosabel of Bergamo loved thee. In the years to come, some other fair one will rest upon thy bosom; and while thou blest her, thou wilt forget Rosabel. And where will Rosabel be? O, merciful heaven, save me from the cruel fate!"

She bowed her head, and groaned in agony. The thought of Ludovico was appalling, and she shrank from it in terror.

Quivering at every joint, she arose and went to her dressing-case, and took therefrom a small dagger. Orlando Vendorme made that dagger, and gave it to her. She kissed it in memory of the giver, and then leaned against the wall, with her hand upon her brow. Where were her thoughts now? Why does she look upon the sharp blade so eagerly, and clutch the jeweled hilt with such nervousness? Why does she move her left hand so strangely over her bosom? Why does she pull away the silk and the lace, and lay bare the pearly skin that rises and falls over her throbbing heart? Does she think of gaining freedom thus from the dreadful embrace of Ludovico? Hark! What is that sound? A knock upon the door. Quick as thought the princess hides her dagger, and then bids the applicant enter.

"The door was opened, and a female, muffled in a dark mantle, came in. As she closed the door behind her she let the mantle fall from her head, thus exposing the face of a bright-eyed, fair-featured girl, of near Rosabel's own age.

"How," cried the princess, starting back;

"is this Hippolita?"

"It is my name."

"The minion of Hugh de Castro?"

"A child of misfortune, noble lady," replied the visitor, in a low, sad tone. "Blame me if you will—blame me all the earth—but, O, I think Heaven hath some pity."

"Pardon, pardon, Hippolita," exclaimed Rosabel, advancing quickly and extending her hand. "I blame no one for misfortune, for, alas! I am the most unfortunate being alive. Now sit thee down, and tell me why thou art here."

"We must be alone," said the girl, casting her eyes over the room.

"We are alone."

"But we must not be overheard; for what I have to say no other mortal ear must hear."

"You may speak freely, and without fear."

"Then, lady, continued Hippolita, drawing her stool nearer to the princess, and speaking in a low tone, 'listen to my story, and do not upbraid me until you have heard me through. Five nights ago my master came to me, and wished me to do him a service. His will had been my law for so long that I thought not of refusing; and when he offered me a great reward, I told him I would do anything he asked. He showed me a purse of gold, and a necklace of diamonds, and promised me, when my work was done, that these should be mine. I then felt that I could do anything for him, and I swore that he might trust me. He placed this mantle upon my shoulders, and led me to the palace; and when we had reached the porch beneath the old tower, he took a torch and conducted me down to the lowest, deepest, darkest dungeon. It was a long, dreary passage, and he told me I must learn to tread it without a light; and to that end he led me to and fro until I could grope my way from the porch to the pit in the darkness. Then he told me that there was a certain person in Milan whom I was to lead to that dungeon. He dared not send officers to arrest him, but he must be taken to his prison so secretly that no soul should know I save those engaged in the work. I told

I could do very easily as I did it properly. The man to be imprisoned was Orlando Vendorme—Hold, lady. Hear me to the end. I was instructed how to do my work, even to the very words I was to speak; and then I entered upon the task. That night I hid myself near the armorer's shop, but I found no opportunity to speak with Vendorme alone. On the following night I went again, but with no better success. On the third night, however, I gained the opportunity I sought. Through a small window I saw that the youth was at work alone, and I went and rapped upon the door. He admitted me, and after gaining from him a pledge of secrecy, I delivered the errand with which I had been charged—the false, lying errand which was to lead him to his doom. I told him that I came from the Princess Rosabel, and that she sought his help. He grasped at the prospect, and said that mortal danger should not deter him from any effort the good of the princess might require. Then I told him that Rosabel wished to escape the hated bondage with which she was threatened by union with Ludovico, and that she looked to him for aid. He clasped his hands, and swore that he would give up his life for the good of the princess if need be. Holy, lady—"

"No, no," cried Rosabel, pale and quivering, "I cannot hold my peace! O, how could you do it?"

"But, dear lady, will you listen! Wait till I have told you all, and your thoughts shall be turned into another channel."

"Go on, go on—O, what perfidy! Speak quickly, and ease my burning heart if you can!"

"I told Vendorme that I had been commissioned to conduct him to the princess, and he followed me with eagerness. I led him to the palace—led him to the porch beneath the old tower—and led him into the dark passage. The way had been prepared, so there were no obstructions. I groped along the gloomy course—down the slimy steps—into the very bowels of the earth—and finally reached the lowest dungeon, where the man was to be shut up. O, lady, if you think I was heartless—if you think I did this willingly—you are mistaken. When I had heard the youth speak—when he breathed forth such devotion to one of my sex—when I saw his noble, handsome face, and remembered his gallant conduct—I felt my resolution grow weak. But I had promised to do it, and I dared not disobey. But when I had led him to that deep dungeon, where the air was chill and damp, and where, perhaps, he was to find a grave, my heart sank within me, and I grew faint and dizzy. Had I then been mistress of my own actions, I should have turned back; but my master was close at hand. Vendorme asked me why I trembled so, but availed the question by telling him a falsehood. I left him there, telling him that I was going to seek the princess, and in a moment more the solid iron door was shut upon him!"

"The rest of that night I could not sleep a wink; and all day to-day, I have been suffering more than I can tell. This afternoon Ludovico came to see my master, and I heard them talking of the marriage which, they said, was to come off to-morrow. By and by they mentioned the name of Orlando Vendorme, and I crept nearer to listen. What I then heard froze my blood with horror! No, no, lady—hold! It is not so bad, listen."

Hippolita caught the hand of the princess, and begged her to sustain herself.

"If you love the noble young knight, and would save him, you have need of all your strength; so faint not yet."

"Save him! Save him!" cried Rosabel starting forward and seizing Hippolita by the arm. "Can I? can I?"

"Listen, lady. I told you I heard them speak of Orlando Vendorme. O, it was horrible; but it may not yet be too late. He is shut up in that deep, dark, damp, cold dungeon; and there he is doomed to die, without food, and without drink! This is the third night, and he has had no succor yet. I heard Ludovico say that he would marry the princess while Vendorme was struggling with the last touch of death!"

With a groan so deep and agonizing that even the dumb walls seemed startled by its intensity, the princess clasped her hands upon her brow, and fixed a wild, staring look upon the visitor.

"One moment," struggled Hippolita, putting out her hands. "I will quickly finish. When I heard this terrible speech I resolved that, if the thing were necessary, my life should be given to the undoing of the wrong I had done. I have obtained the keys of all the doors between us and the fearful dungeon, except those which belong to your own apartments, and I have come to you, believing that you would help me in the work of salvation. If you can undermine with the rear porch, I can do the rest. My master had the key to the dungeon, and I know where to find it. O, lady, can you help me? I would have gone alone, and set the prisoner free, but if he escapes he must come this way. He cannot pass the guard in the rear court."

Rosabel moved forward a step, and caught the messenger by the hand.

"Hippolita," she said, in a quick, sharp whisper, "can I trust you?"

"Dear lady," returned the bond-woman, "I am trusting you with my life."

"But," pursued the princess, tightening her grasp, and quivering at every joint, "if I should flee—if success attends us, and I should flee with the knight—should flee from the horrible fate the tyrant of Milan has in store for me—would you be true to me then?"

"Ere I answer you I have a favor to ask," replied Hippolita, sinking down upon her knees. "Let me go with you, and I will be as true to you as the sun is true to the day, and I will lay down my life for you if necessary."

"So shall it be," said Rosabel, lifting the girl to her feet. "And now," she added, still tremulous with excitement, "let us hasten upon our mission. O, there is no time to be lost. Every moment may be as precious as a life."

"We must take some cordial with us," suggested Hippolita, who had been considering upon the steps necessary to be taken.

"Certainly," replied the princess. "And is there anything else?"

"I think of nothing."

Rosabel of Bergamo could not have taken a sister more completely into her confidence than she had taken the girl who now bore her company. The release of the prisoner was an object with them both; but that was not all. If Rosabel wished to flee from the power of the duke, Hippolita was no less anxious to flee from the wrath of her master, so in this they had a common cause. When the princess had prepared herself for the mission, she turned and took her companion by the hand.

"Hippolita, henceforth our fates are cast together. If we save the knight I will forgive and forgive the past, and thou shalt find a home with me while we both live."

"And I," replied the girl, with deep, sincere emotion, "will serve you most faithfully."

"Now let us go."

In the rear of the palace was a small garden, surrounded by a high wall, to which the princess had access at all times; and in going thither it was necessary to enter the long passage through which the knight had been conducted. Rosabel had the keys of the doors that lay between her apartment and the garden, and when she had found them, the two adventurers started on their mission. With cautious steps they moved on, the princess going in advance with the keys, while Hippolita followed with a small lantern, which she could conceal beneath her mantle when she pleased. Thus they reached the vaulted passage, and here they exchanged positions, for now Hippolita had the keys, and knew how to lead the way.

And how was it in the dungeon?

Cold, damp and drear! With the last effort of nature Vendorme struggled to his feet, and staggered against the wall. He pressed his swollen tongue upon the cold stone, but the sense of relief was gone. A little while he stood there, and then he reached once more for his sword. Twice he had found the point, and twice he had put it away, but hope was gone, and his poor life was going with it. He had placed the hilt upon the floor of his cell, and was trying to balance himself so as to aim the point at his heart, when his ear was struck by the sound of a hand upon the bars of his door. He listened a moment, and when he was assured that the door was being opened, he let his sword fall and started forward. But he had not the strength to support himself, and when he had staggered a few steps he sank down upon the hard, cold floor. He knew that the door was opened, and that the light was shining in upon him, and presently some one knelt by his side, and called his name.

What sound was that? What was it that thrilled this soul with such awakening power? What was it that sent such a thrill to his heart; and startled his nerves to sense and feeling?

"Orlando! Orlando!"

He started up, and supported himself on his elbow.

"Who speaks to me?"

"Orlando! Orlando! O, can you not arise? Do you know me? I am come to save you! O, in Heaven's name, faint not yet! Support yourself yet awhile longer, and all may be well with us both! It is Rosabel who speaks!

"Rosabel! Rosabel!" gasped the prisoner, putting forth his hands.

She guided them to her shoulders—she wound her own arms about him, and thus lifted him to a sitting posture.

"He is fainting for the want of drink," said Hippolita, who had just mustered strength enough to speak; for the sight of the terrible work she had helped to do had shocked her so that for awhile she had been faint and dizzy. But a sense of the necessity that was upon her, and the atonement she was to make, gave her new strength, and forthwith she applied herself to the assistance of the sufferer. She produced the wine she had brought with her, in a silver flask, and when the stopple had been removed she placed it to the knight's lips. Eagerly did he swallow the welcome draught, and as the warmth spread through his system, he felt new strength.

"More—more of the wine," he begged the flask was removed from his lips.

"In a little while," returned the princess. "It may be dangerous to drink too much now."

"Ha! that voice! No, no—it is a dream!" And he swept his hand across his eyes.

"It is not a dream, Orlando. It is Rosabel. She is here to save you. O, can you not go with her?"

The youth gazed up, and when, finally, he saw the sweet face of the angel, and could distinguish the soul-cherished features, he sank forward, with his head upon her bosom. "It is," he murmured. "It is Rosabel. Am I to be taken hence?"

"Yes, I have come to take you. Can you walk?"

With an effort he rose to his feet, and as he did so his gaze rested upon Hippolita.

"Oh," he cried, as soon as he recognized her, "then you did not deceive me! You were not the cruel one I had feared. You did not bring me here, knowingly, to my death."

The poor girl knew not what to say, but Rosabel came quickly to her assistance:

"This girl, Orlando, has come with me to help you. Sheit was who informed me where you were, and to her I am indebted for this privilege."

"O, God be praised!" the sufferer ejaculated, fervently. "I had almost cursed her in the belief that she had brought me here to die. But she will forgive me for the thought. May I not have more wine now?"

The flask was now given into his hands, and he drained it to the bottom. In a little while he was able to stand without assistance, and his step was safe. It was not the wine alone that had given him such invigoration. Far, far from it. As he turned and cast his eyes once more upon the princess, he falteringly said:

"If this is true—if you have come to save me—I will find strength to support myself. Whither wilt thou lead me?"

"First," replied Rosabel, "we must lead you to a purer air than this. Let us find a better resting place, and then we will consider. You can lean upon me."

"Upon you, lady?"

"Yes—fear not—I am strong enough. Hippolita shall go on in advance, and we will follow."

"Upon you! And not a dream! O, my soul!"

And she took his arm and led him forth

Meanwhile, Hippolita led the way in safety, opening the doors as they interposed and being careful to close them behind her, until she reached the outer door of all, which opened into a side court, where a sentinel was generally posted. Here she stopped, and conferred with the princess.

"If we can pass from this door," she said, "we are free from the palace. It opens into a small court, where there is a large gate and a wicket, and to the wicket I have a key. Sometimes there is a sentinel posted here."

"But not always?" said Rosabel, interrogatively.

"I believe he is very seldom absent. Hark!" And thus speaking, Hippolita put her ear to the door and listened.

"Yes," she added, "he is here. I can hear his step very plainly."

"What now?" cried the princess, in alarm. "Must we give up after gaining thus much?"

"Wait," said Vendorme, moving a step nearer to the door, and drawing himself up as though he would try his muscles. "This is the court on the side of the Olona!"

"Yes," replied Hippolita.

"And you have the key to the wicket?"

"Yes."

"Then our course is clear. Do you open the door, and let me pass out first. I will meet the guard, and find some way to overcome him. Fear not, lady—I know what I do."

"But—sir—you are weak," urged Rosabel.

"Upon my life, lady—aye, upon more than that—upon my responsibility for your safety—I know what I do. Let us waste no time. There is but a single sentinel, and he must be passed. Let your attendant conceal her lantern, and open the door; and do you remain behind until I bid you come."

Rosabel gave her consent, and the door was opened. Our hero drew his sword, and stepped forth into the open air, meeting the sentinel but a few feet distant. The stars were shining brightly, and the knight saw clearly the work that lay before him. The guardsman was an ordinary-sized fellow, armed with a spear, who, when he beheld a man advancing from the open door, demanded to know who came there.

"Who should come this way but one who has the right?" returned our hero. "Listen, fellow, for I have a word to say to thee."

Now in all probability that sentinel had never seen a man come from that door who had no business to pass; so thinking of no harm, he rested the pole of his lance upon the pavement, and listened to what was to be said.

"Do you know me?" asked the youth, taking a step forward.

"Eh?" uttered the soldier, staring into the questioner's face. "Why, it is the knight of the Silver Cross! It is Vendorme! Bless me, sir, where did you come from? There has been a great noise about you."

Orlando was very sure that none of the guard had been entrusted with the secret of his imprisonment, so he ventured boldly upon his reply:

"I came into the palace by one way, and I am going out by another; but I am not alone. I have two companions with me. We have come from a distant apartment, and every door is locked behind us, leaving no trace of our passage. This door we will also lock, so that, when we are gone, you alone will know we went. I tell you this so that you may be prepared to shield yourself should you be questioned touching your knowledge of our departure. You know me, and you know what my pledge is worth."

As our hero thus spoke he grasped the fellow's spear, and wrenched it from him; at the same time raising the point of his sword.

"Beware! You are safe if you obey me. Not a soul in the palace will know how I have gone if you hold your peace. I am fleeing for my life, and you should know how to hold me. Stand back and let my companions pass, and all shall be well; but, if you give one note of alarm, it shall be your last note of life!"

It was very easy to see that the guardsman had no thought of entering into a physical conflict with the knight who had overcome all opponents in the list, and who had also slain the giant Matteo in a hand-to-hand encounter. The very presence of the redoubtable champion overcame him with awe. Still he had an idea to his own safety.

"You cannot pass further," he said, without any effort to regain his spear. "The gate is locked, and the captain has the key."

"We have the key to the wicket," returned Vendorme, "and can easily make our way out. Now answer me—shall we pass?"

"You will not betray me?"

"Of course not. I tell you once again, we have left no trace behind us, and it can never be known which way we came, unless you confess it. Come—speak."

"Give me back my spear, and go."

pale. "I think it is a friend—one who led this lady and myself in safety from prison."

It was Hippolita who demanded admittance; and when she had been seated with the rest, Orlando commenced the explanation which was anxiously waited for. He told his own story—how he had been led away by the false errand—he did not yet know that Hippolita had acted against him knowingly—how he had been cast into the dungeon—how the prince had come to him, and revealed to him the horrible fate to which he had been doomed—how he had suffered almost unto death—and how, at the last moment, the saving angel came and set him free.

During this recital Cinthia trembled and paled with horror, while Michael and Gaspard clenched their hands and ground their teeth.

"As for the princess," purged our hero, after he had answered several questions from Gaspard, "she can tell you what she pleases."

"I have little to tell," said Rosabel; "and, if I had, time would not permit the recital. It is enough that I hope to escape from a doom worse to me than death. I think you understand me."

They did understand her; and they showed no disposition to trouble her with questions. She simply added, by way of doing justice to her attendant, that to Hippolita both she and the knight owed their escape from the palace.

And now the question was—how should the fugitives get out from the city? Orlando felt strong enough to move on, and he believed that the fresh air of the country would help to invigorate him.

"It is all very simple," said Gaspard. "If you do not object I shall bear you company for a while; that is, if you turn your steps to the north."

"I mean to go that way," replied Vendorme, "and I shall accept your company thankfully."

"Then there will be no trouble. I have a right to pass from the city at any time, with my attendants, and the guard, if they have had no special orders to the contrary, will not question me."

Michael was anxious to accompany his master; but his proposition was quickly ruled down, and he finally consented to remain behind; and as soon as this understanding had been arrived at, he started out with Gaspard to procure horses. Orlando had two horses in a neighboring stall, which Michael obtained, while the Saxon soon brought two of his own. The animals were led into the court, where the party were presently in the saddle.

"I shall hear from you," said Michael, holding his master by the hand. "You will find some way to let me know of your fate?"

"Fear not, my good friend," replied our hero. "While I live I will not forget you."

He then kissed Cinthia's hand, and when the latter had bade an affectionate adieu to Rosabel and Hippolita, the party rode out from the yard. At the gate of the Savona the guard wished to know who passed at that hour.

"Gaspard of Saxony and his friends?" was the reply.

And the reply was accepted, and the party allowed to pass without further question.

"How many hours to sunrise?" asked Orlando, when they had cleared the city.

"Not more than three," replied Gaspard. "Then we have need of haste."

"Do you fear?"

"Fear—I? No, sir—not beyond the walls of Milan. But—for this fair lady—I would—"

"I understand," said the Saxon.

"O," cried Rosabel, as she grasped and tightened her rein, "let me ride on even unto death, rather than be taken back to Milan!"

"Then on we go!" said Gaspard. "I will lead the way until the sun is up."

The horses opened into a striding gallop, and the party sped swiftly on away from the sleeping city.

And whither did they go? What should be the end?

Orlando Vendorme asked himself these questions as he gazed upon the face of the beautiful being who rode beside him, but he knew not what to answer. A strange thought—almost a hope—came tremblingly up from his heart, but he dared not give it place in his reason.

He would save Rosabel of Bergamo if he could. Why need he think further?

CHAPTER XIX.
WHITHER NOW?

The trembling, anxious party reached the apartments of the princess without meeting opposition; and when once there several questions arose. First,—how fared it with the knight,—could he sustain himself through further trial? He was very weak, and the last ascent had been made with the utmost difficulty; but he said he only needed nourishment. Rosabel quickly brought him food and drink, the very sight of which seemed to give him vigor. And while he was eating, the second question arose: How could they leave the palace?

"I think," said Hippolita, "that I can open a way. I have with me all my master's keys; and I know that he has a private entrance to the palace."

"Certainly he has," returned the princess.

"Yes," pursued the other, "for I have come in with him. If I were in the audience-chamber, I could easily find my way out."

"Then," cried Rosabel, in a tone of relief, "all may be well. I cannot reach the audience-chamber; but I can gain access to the passage which must be threaded in passing out thence by de Castro's private way, as it crosses the path to my bath."

As soon as this point was settled, Rosabel betook herself to her closet, where she collected her valuable jewels, together with quite a sum of money, and also took a mantle of sufficient size to cover her head and shoulders. When she returned to the chamber, she found that Vendorme had so far recovered that he was able to walk to and fro without difficulty.

The nourishment he had taken, and the invigoration of the generous wine, had given tone to his strength, while the thought of escape started the circulation in his system, sending vigor to every part. He had taken his sword, which Hippolita had brought from the dungeon, and as he let it fall into its scabbard, he said to the princess:

"Now, fair lady, I am strong enough to proceed. If I might judge from your preparation you mean to accompany me?"

"Yes, sir," replied Rosabel. She hesitated a moment, and then added—"But before I move let me undecieve you upon one point. I did not draw you into the danger from which you are now trying to escape. I had no hand or part in bringing you to the palace. The message which drew you hither was false. I did not send it. You deadly enemies framed it, and obtained its conveyance. If there are further explanations to be made, I can make them at some future time, if I have an opportunity. I have told this to you so that you should not imagine that I led you into such great danger."

"Hold a moment, lady," said the knight, putting forth his hand as though he would warn her back; "if you did not, after all, seek for my presence, let us part here. You must not place yourself in further peril for me. I would rather die where I am than owe my life to your misery."

"You misunderstand me, sir," said the princess, advancing and placing her hand upon his arm. "I have as much to fear and dread beneath the roof of this palace as you have; and so I have as much need to flee. Thus far let the matter be understood between us. And now, are you strong enough to proceed?"

"Yes, lady." With cautious steps Rosabel led the way from her chamber, and reached the passage, to which allusion had been made, without difficulty. It now became Hippolita's duty to lead, so she took the lantern and went ahead, while the princess walked by the side of the knight. She took his hand—took it as though she would assist him,—and the thought that he had been weak, and was leaning upon her for support, gave her strength and power. His hand trembled as it rested in her grasp, she asked him if he would bear more weight upon her.

"I am strong enough," she said; "and you tremble as though you were weak. Lean upon me."

"Strong! Weak!—Lean upon you?" repeated Vendorme, gazing down upon the lovely face which was but dimly revealed by the struggling beams from Hippolita's lantern. "Ah, lady, I am not weak now. I am stronger than you think. Were the tyrant to meet us at this moment I believe my sword would fly from its scabbard as quickly as ever; and this arm should wield it, too. If I trembled, it was not from weakness."

Rosabel bowed her head, and spoke no more; but she did not yet let go the hand she held.

... you give an alarm, he it so much as a sigh, my passage shall be over your dead body. And yet I would not harm you if I can help it. Come—we have no time to spare."

The sentinel moved back against the wall, and folded his arms upon his breast.

"I trust in your knightly word," he said, "that you will give me back my spear before you leave me."

"You shall have it."

And when he had thus spoken Vendorme turned to the door, and bade his companions come forth. They came, so closely muffled in their mantles that their features could not be seen, and Hippolita advanced directly to the wicket and unlocked it. She passed out first, and when Rosabel had gone, Orlando placed the spear against the wall and followed them, the sentinel making no movement to oppose them. When the wicket had been relocked the party stood in a narrow street, with no present bar to their progress.

Whither now?

"I must get some sign of intelligence to Michael Totilla," said Orlando; "and furthermore, I must find some bit of rest. I am glad the guardsman did not try my arm, for I much fear that my strength would have failed me in the event. Still, lady, I am at your service."

"Let me speak," interposed Hippolita; and she presented her claim to be heard the more readily because she saw that neither the knight nor the princess were calm enough for deep reason. "Of one thing we may be sure: Our flight cannot be known till morning; so we have some hours yet of security before us. I must return to my master's house, and carry back these keys; and in the meantime you can proceed to the armorer's shop, where I will meet you. I think the keys had better be returned; and I know that I can do it without danger. In less than half an hour we will all be at the armorer's where we shall have Michael to assist us."

As no better plan than this could be thought of, Orlando and Rosabel at once agreed to it, and so the parties proceeded in their respective courses.

"We must not remain long at the armorer's," said the princess, as she and her companion walked on.

"We will not," returned Vendorme. "Do not fear on my account, lady. I am not so weak, even now, as I was a short time since. The excitement of the moment, when I met the guard, made a heavy draft upon my strength of nerve. If you wish to leave Milan, be sure I am able to go with you."

"We must be clear of Milan before daylight," said Rosabel. "Oh, I should dread the consequences of being within these walls on the morrow."

"We will not be here. We both have reason to flee from the tyrant's cruel wrath."

When they reached the armorer's house Orlando knocked upon the door, and ere long the voice of Michael was heard within, demanding who was there. The applicant had but to speak, and in a moment more the door was thrown open, and his hand was grasped by the honest armorer.

"My eyes and ears do not deceive me!"

Michael cried, holding his young master in a close embrace.

"No, my good Michael; I am here safe and sound, though somewhat weak; and I have a companion, too, who claims your assistance."

"Welcome, all friends of Vendorme, to all that Michael Totilla has. And now come to our board."

When they reached the dwelling-room they found Cynthia already there, she having arisen at the first alarm; and when she had embraced Orlando, she turned to his companion, who had not yet thrown the mantle from her head.

"Lady, thou art welcome. How! The princess?"

"Yes, good wife," replied the fugitive, letting her mantle fall. "Rosabel of Bergamo seeks your friendship and your aid."

Cynthia was considerably startled by this discovery; but she quickly regained her composure, and gave to the princess a cheerful promise of love and fidelity.

"Ha," cried Michael, "here is another friend. Perhaps you recognize him, my master?"

Orlando turned as he heard a door open behind him, and beheld a man approaching.

"I think I should know that face," he said. "Yes, yes,—it is our esquire of Saxony—good Gaspard. Am I not right?"

"Of a verity you are," replied Gaspard, extending his hand. "Saint Andrew! how strange it is! The bird returns as we were about to sit down in despair."

"Gaspard has been helping me in my search after you," explained Michael.

"Ha! there is another knock at the door!"

"Be not alarmed," said Orlando, as he

BEFORE TREATMENT

"When I consulted Drs. Kennedy & Kergan, I had little hope. I was surprised. Their new Method Treatment improved me the first week. Emissions ceased, nerves became strong, pains disappeared, hair grew in again, eyes became bright, cheerful in company and strong sexually. Having tried many Quacks, I can heartily recommend Drs. Kennedy & Kergan as reliable Specialists. They treated me honorably and skillfully."

BEFORE TREATMENT

I live on the farm. At school I learned an early habit, which weakened me physically, sexually and mentally. Family Doctors said I was going into 'decline' (Consumption). Finally 'The Golden Monitor,' edited by Drs. Kennedy & Kergan fell into my hands. I learned the Truth and Cause. Self abuse had sapped my vitality. I took the New Method Treatment and was cured. My friends think I was cured of Consumption. I have sent them many patients, all of whom were cured. Their New Method Treatment supplies vigor, vitality and manhood."

The Arena for November.

This increasingly popular magazine concludes its tenth volume with the November number, which contains 164 pages of reading matter. The opening paper is by W. H. Savage, on "The Religion of Emerson," the grand "Old Concord philosopher," who was charged with being a Pagan without religion, but this paper shows him to have been "profoundly religious" in the best sense. A number of other papers including one of a series, by the editor on "The Century of Sir Thomas More," make up a creditable finish. The Arena Publishing Company, Boston, Mass., Pierce Building. Single number, 50c. $5 per annum.

A Dispute.

A dispute between Jas. Mowbray and his brother Wm. of Erinsville, was left to arbitration, the case being tried at Tamworth on Monday, of last week, H. M. Deroche acting as one of the arbitrators. It appears that their father, now deceased, left the old homestead to Jas. with the understanding that he was to keep his imbecile brother, Robert. - Robt., not being satisfied with the treatment received from Jas, went to live with his brother, Wm. This happened about two years ago. Now Wm. has presented a bill for $100 a year for the maintenance of Robt., which Jas. refuses to pay, hence the suit. The arbitrators could not agree on a settlement and the case was laid over until this week.

He said he never went to school or church, and was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors.

Danger from Catarrh.

The most important feature about that very common complaint, catarrh in the head, is its tendency to develop into some other more serious and dangerous disease. The foul matter dropping from the head into the bronchial tubes or lungs is very liable to lead to bronchitis or consumption, that destroyer which causes more deaths in this country than any other disease. As catarrh originates in impurities in the blood, local applications can do but little good. The common sense method of treatment is to purify the blood, and for this purpose there is no preparation superior to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The powerful action of this medicine upon the blood expels every impurity, and by so doing cures catarrh and gives health to the entire organism.

Five Cent Readings

The first of the series of five cent readings that the Young People's Society of the Eastern Methodist church purpose holding once a week during the winter, took place on Thursday evening of last week. Geo. Detlor in Town.

Mary Ann Detlor reported to the police on Monday night that her husband, Geo. Detlor, was in town and had tried to effect an entrance into her house. He has made repeated attempts to take her life, and when she recognized who it was she made her escape through the back door and informed Chief of Police Storms of his arrival. The chief reported the matter to the Sheriff, and, acting on his instructions, secured a gang of men and surrounded the house, but no trace of Detlor was discovered. Geo. Detlor is a notorious horse thief and outlaw, and there is a bench warrant and $250 reward out for his arrest. While in the Napanee gaol awaiting trial about fourteen years ago, on a charge of horse stealing, he and a confederate named Wagar effected their escape by climbing the turkey, Lewis Clarke, into insensibility, gagging him, securing the keys and making their egress. Notwithstanding the fact that he has been outlawed, Detlor has returned to Napanee, it is alleged, several times since then. He has repeatedly attempted to murder his wife, and the police are in possession of several bullets that he fired at her with the object of taking her life. Chief Storms is of the opinion that Mrs. Detlor was mistaken in the identity of her man on Monday night, and that Detlor was not in Napanee at all. A man answering the outlaw's description was at the Tichborne House that afternoon, so it is just possible the Chief may be mistaken. Detlor is a stout, strong built man with black hair, and from his appearance, it is said, one would not take him for the all-around bad man that he evidently is. It was chief Storms who arrested Detlor and Wagar, for horse stealing, and at the time that they effected their escape from gaol, Mr. Clarke, with the exception of the gaoler's wife, was along at the time.

Cold Weather Comforts

- - THIS WEEK - -

We would like to remind you of some seasonable (and reasonable) things in our stock just now.

In the DRY GOODS Store

Ladies' Furs, Capes, Muffs, Collars, Coats, Caps, Ruffs. Every day is making big inroads in this stock, and quickest buyers will buy best. We do not wait till March to sell Furs Cheap. There are no nicer Furs anywhere.

Children's Furs, Collars, Caps and Muffs, in Grey Lamb and Iceland Lamb, at prices that will please you.

Ladies' Mantles, a peerless stock. Many of the lowest priced lines are sold out; no time to import more so we will give you a cut in the better ones to make a low price. We won't have a Mantle left by 1st Dec.

Blankets, the good Kind, the right Wool, the right sizes, the right weight. Blankets from $1.90 to $8.50, and the $8.50 one is just as cheap as the $1.90 one.

And these Three Things, Hosiery, Gloves, and Flannels are cheaper and better here than elsewhere. See if it isn't so.

IN THE CLOTHING STORE

Overcoats, first of course, we have every kind, but Ulsters are selling best. Good Overcoats at Dry Goods prices. Cash and One Price can be depended on to give you the best Coat for your money. Ulsters for little fellows, neat, strong and warm, and cheap for quality, every one.

Underwear for Men and Boys, most surprisingly cheap, but not cheap enough to hurt the quality in any case. Clean Wools, popular makes, and popular prices. We sell more Underwear than any house in Eastern Ontario.

A Tweed Bargain at Twenty-nine cents; have you seen it yet. If not, better come soon, it goes like our early snow.

In the Shoe Store. We are daily receiving repeat orders of Granby Rubbers and Overshoes, which are great sellers. We have cheaper kinds also, but everyone seems to want the best, at the prices we sell them. We have extraordinary value in Boy's and Girl's school Boots. We have good goods and good values in MEN'S FINE BOOTS.

more new styles in Ladies' Boots of every price and quality that can be guaranteed good, but no other kind. Come to us for Shoes, first if you can, last if you will, but when you come you will buy, and that is the important part.

The Bay of Quinte Railroad does not alter train service, which is wise on their part, for they have a service now that properly accommodates its patrons. An improvement is made, however, in leaving Napanee a little later mornings at 7.50 a.m., arriving at Kingston at 10 o'clock, and this train will soon become as popular with the travelling public as the same is which proceeds to Tweed, thereby making a first-class connection with C. P. R. for Peterboro and all points west between west of Tweed and to Ottawa and all points between east of Tweed. We recommend this route to all people wishing to reach these points. It is well for our townspeople to recognize the merits of the service given by this company and to patronize them with freight and travel as much as possible, for the company is ever mindful of Napanee's interests. We have often remarked that no complaint reaches us of neglect, discourtesy, or other faults, usually brought to a newspapers notice, but instead all travellers speak favorably of it, and are always speaking in its praise, or making most favorable comparisons with other roads.

Sewing Society Meetings.

There will be two meetings next week of the Sewing Society of St. Mary Magdalene's church. On Wednesday, at Mrs. Jas. E. Herring's, at two o'clock, and on Friday, at Mrs. R. G. Wright's, at the same hour.

Missionary Meetings, Camden East.

The annual missionary meetings were held in the parish of Camden on Sunday, the 18th inst., and Monday. The first meeting took place in St. Luke's, Camden East. The attendance was fair. Addresses were delivered by E. J. B. Pense, Esq., of Kingston, who kindly drove over from Kingston. He delivered a plain, practical and very forcible statement of the needs of the church. The Rev. R. S. Forneri followed with a clear and very earnest address on the steady progress of the church in the Dominion and especially in this diocese. In the afternoon the same deputation addressed the congregation in Holy Trinity, Yarker, in the same clear, earnest and forcible way, making a great impression upon this noble little band of faithful servants who amidst many trials are fighting manfully for the faith once for all time delivered to the saints. In the evening His Honor Judge Wilkinson kindly drove out to Newburgh and took Mr. Pense's place, he having to return to Kingston, and delivered a splendidly clear and earnest address upon the needs of the poorer parts of the diocese. Rev. Mr. Forneri again clearly showed the wonderful progress of the church in the diocese during the last 32 years. The services were well and very heartily rendered by the several congregations calling forth special notice from the deputation. The collections were better on the whole than last year, St. John's, Newburgh, adding very much to its former offering. On Monday evening the Rev. R. S. Forneri and the incumbent held a meeting at Centreville to help encourage this new outpost.

Services on Sunday next:—
St. Luke's, Camden East, 10 o'clock, morning prayer and Holy Communion.
Evening prayer 7 o'clock. As this will be the last Sunday of the christian year the incumbent will preach a special sermon in the evening at St. Luke's, St. John's Newburgh, 3 o'clock, Centreville 3 o'clock, Holy Trinity, Yarker, 7 o'clock, Napanee Mills 10.30 a.m. The Rev. F. T. Dibb will preach in St. Luke's in the morning, St. John's and Holy Trinity in the afternoon and evening. The incumbent taking duty at Tamworth in the morning and Enterprise in the afternoon.
